Short Course in Strategic Health Leadership and Management

Course description
This short course provides students with knowledge on leadership and managerial approaches in health care organisations. Lectures will be delivered by both academics and guest industry leaders.

The overall objective is to introduce students to issues in healthcare leadership and management in Australian and global health industries, as well as developing appropriate competencies to work effectively in health organisations.

The course aims to develop essential strategic health leadership for effective management of health services and projects.

Main learning outcomes
• Integrate the styles and attributes of effective health industry leaders
• Understand hierarchy of strategic and tactical perspectives in the context of health care organisations
• Evaluate the changing contexts of the health industry, and develop appropriate knowledge and skills for leadership and management
• Understand fundamental theories of health leadership and management: trait, skill, style and situational approaches to management
• Understand yourself as a potential manager: Given who I am, and can become, what kind of manager am I likely to be? What can and should I do to prepare myself for a job as a manager - and at what management level(s)?

Duration
• Option A (for credit eligibility): 4 days plus assessments*
• Option B (not for credit): 4 days
*N.B. Assessments may need to be completed in own time during and after completion of 4 day course.
