THE IDEA OF THE ‘THIRD REICH’ (‘DRITTES REICH’) IN GERMAN LEGAL, PHILOSOPHICAL AND POLITICAL THINKING IN THE 20TH CENTURY

GÁBOR HAMZA *

Abstract

The idea that after the ‘National Socialist’ takeover the German political propaganda strongly supported the naming of their land the ‘Third Reich’ is a misperception. A circular letter that was issued by the Ministry of People’s Education and Propaganda of the German Empire in July 1939 explicitly forbade the official use of ‘Third Reich’. In March 1942 the Ministry of People’s Education and Propaganda issued a circular letter with provisions for the official name of the ‘new Germany’. The same circular letter limits the use of the expression to Germany, emphasising that there is only one Empire and that is Germany.

Following the Christian doctrine of Trinitarianism the three empires can be thought of in a religious and messianic way as follows: the ‘First Empire’ is related to the Father, the ‘Second Empire’ to the Son, while the ‘Third Empire’ to the Holy Spirit. According to such an interpretation the ‘Third Empire’ would constitute the zenith of history. This ‘Third Empire’ would follow a distorted era of Christianity that would be realised by the arrival of a new Messiah.

In the preface of his work Das dritte Reich Arthur Moeller van den Bruck emphasises that the notion of the ‘Third Empire’ is ideological, that rises above reality. According to Moeller van den Bruck only with the elimination of its pseudo-values can Germany fulfil its mission of reviving Europe. It is the duty of the young generation to revitalise the dormant German intellectuals. Only as a result of such a ‘revolution’ can the ‘Third Empire’ come into existence. The idea of the ‘Third Reich’ has quite an influence on the thinking of the conservative cultural philosophers.

For political and philosophical reasons the national socialist regime isolates itself from the idea of ‘Third Reich’ already by the end of the 1930s. The ‘conservative revolutionary’ branch of the ‘German Movement’ – including all branches of the ‘conservative revolution’ – was unacceptable as an ideological base for the national socialist rulers. The ‘völkisch’ branch of the Deutsche Bewegung is an entirely different matter. Of all these different movements the Führerprinzip idea, symbolised by Hans Friedrich Karl Günter, Richard Walter Darré Alfred Ernst Rosenberg became the official ideology of the national socialist Germany, in which the idea of the ‘Third Reich’ no longer played a role.

I

The idea that after the ‘National Socialist’ (Nazi) takeover the German political propaganda machine strongly supported the naming of their land (State) the ‘Third Reich’ (Drittes Reich) is a misperception shared by many philosophers, historians, political scientists as well as lawyers all around the world even today. It is much less known that Adolf Hitler himself was never in full support of this expression even tough it proved quite effective both before and after the NSDAP (Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei) takeover.¹ A circular letter (Rundschreiben) that was issued by the Ministry of People’s Education and Propaganda (Reichsministerium für Volksaufklärung und Propaganda) of the German Empire (Deutsches Reich) on July 10, 1939 explicitly forbade the official use of ‘Third Reich’. According to this circular letter Germany’s official name is from this point on ‘Greater German Empire’ (Großdeutsches

It is worth pointing out that the ‘Greater German Empire’ (Großgermanisches Reich) used by the SS cannot be considered official (offiziell) either.

Years later on March 21, 1942 the Ministry of People’s Education and Propaganda issued a circular letter with provisions for the official name of the ‘new Germany’ (neues Deutschland). It was to be called ‘Empire’, quite possibly modelled after the British Empire. The goal of using the expression of ‘Empire’ was to illustrate to the world that the newly acquired lands include territories annexed or occupied by military force by Germany without any international validity, altogether ca 841 000 sq km. The same circular letter limits the use of the expression to Germany, emphasizing that there is only one Empire and that is Germany. The use of the term ‘Third Reich’, however, implied a ‘serial empire’ which is comparable both in deeds and leaders to the empire, an idea that was entirely incompatible with the self-conscience of the

2 In contemporary German legal textbooks the term ‘Greater German Empire’ (Großdeutsches Reich) was used instead of Germany. See Ernst Rudolf Huber, Verfassungsrecht des Großdeutschen Reiches (Hanseatische Verlagsanstalt, 1939).

3 It is noteworthy that the name of the weekly paper released by Germany for foreign countries between 1940 and 1945 was Das Reich. This paper of the Nazi Germany contained a wide range of political, historical and literary information and was in print even in April 1945.

4 According to a German official statement the territory of Germany in 1942 without Elsace, Lorraine, Luxembourg, the Czech-Moravian Protectorate (Reichsprotektorat Böhmen und Mähren) and Poland (the total size of these lands was 160 000 sq km) was 681 000 sq km. Prior to the Peace Treaty of Versailles the size of the ‘Second Reich’ (which is often called ‘altes Reich’) was 540 000 sq km. This substantial change is primarily due to the annexation of Austria (Anschluß), the Czech-Moravian regions following the Munich Award (Münchner Abkommen) and the Polish regions (eg Warthegau) after the beginning of World War II. After the creation of the ‘Social Republic of Salò’ (Repubblica Sociale di Salò) a part of Northern Italy, the so-called ‘Voralpenland’ which includes Southern Tirol (Südtirol) and the coastline of the Adriatic (‘Adriatisches Küstenland’), became part of Germany. It is, however, difficult to decide whether these territorial acquisitions, from a legal viewpoint, were occupied or annexed.

5 In legal terminology, primarily in administration, one comes across the euphemistic expression ‘Verreichlichung’ quite often.
imperialistic ‘national socialism’ which fancied to be looked upon as the pinnacle of German history.

II

In a historical sense the ‘First Empire’ (Erstes Reich) was established by Otto I (reigning from 936 until 973) in 962 who was crowned emperor by Pope John XII in Rome. This empire is also known as the Holy Roman Empire (Sacrum Romanum Imperium, Heiliges Römisches Reich) which existed until 1806.6 The ‘Second Empire’ (Zweites Reich) was founded on January 18, 1871 in Versailles after the Franco–Prussian War and remained the most influential political and military power in Europe until its dissolution in November 1918. In a sense the Weimar Republic (Weimarer Republik) can be considered an ‘intermezzo’ (Zwischenreich) between the ‘Second Empire’ and the ‘Third Empire’.7

Following the Christian doctrine of Trinitarianism the three empires can be thought of in a religious and messianic way as follows: the ‘First Empire’ is related to the Father, the ‘Second Empire’ to the Son, while the ‘Third Empire’ to the Holy Spirit. According to such an interpretation the ‘Third Empire’ would constitute the zenith of history and the perfect symbiosis between the real and ideal, satisfying the prophetic requirement of Henrik Ibsen and Gotthold Ephreim Lessing\(^8\) that the contradiction between Christianity and Graeco-Roman i.e. classical Antiquity be dissolved. This ‘Third Empire’ would follow a distorted era of Christianity that would be realised by the arrival of a new Messiah.

III

It is furthermore worth mentioning that in Ernst Krieck’s Die deutsche Staatsidee (1917) the ‘Third Empire’ appears not as a historical or political, but rather as a moral idea. Krieck alludes to Johann Gottlieb Fichte (1762–1814), the author of Reden an die deutsche Nation, a work that was rather influential in the latter’s era. By 1919 Dietrich Eckart uses the ‘Third Empire’ with a political and nationalistic content.\(^9\)

Ernst Fraenkel (1898-1975) a renowned lawyer who immigrated after the ‘national socialist’ takeover (nationalsozialistische Machtergreifung), quite rightly uses the term Doppelstaat (Dual State) to describe the autocratic national socialist system, emphasising the double nature of the national socialist political rule. To insure the normal functioning of the economy a Normenstaat is in effect in the areas of civil, trade, corporate and tax law. On the other hand only professional experience, i.e., knowledge plays a part in securing political power (Maßnahmenstaat).\(^10\)

9 It is worth pointing out that the title of Stefan George’s (1868–1933) work is Das neue Reich in which the expression ‘völkisch’ occurs.

In the preface of his work Arthur Moeller van den Bruck (1876–1925) emphasises that the notion of the ‘Third Empire’ is ideological (Weltanschauungsgedanke), that rises above reality. Moeller van den Bruck’s work quickly becomes widely known in Germany and has a large influence on the thinking of the young intellectual class with nationalistic feelings.\(^\text{11}\) The disappointment felt after the very harsh political and economic terms of the Peace Treaty of Versailles (Versailler Friedensvertrag) that were imposed on Germany after the First World War undoubtedly helped shape the thinking of this class. The same work only very slowly becomes known outside of Germany.

The Solingen-born author, who came partly from a traditional Prussian military family, was greatly influenced by the philosophy of Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900). His affinity to the Pan-German ideas (Pangermanismus) is also quite strong. He is rather well acquainted with the most influential European countries, since he visited England, France, Austria, Italy and Russia between the turn of the century and the outbreak of the First World War. He was never really concerned about the unique ethnic problems of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. With the exception of the Austrian-Hungarian Dual Monarchy (Doppelmonarchie Österreich-Ungarn) and Germany he vehemently criticises the major Western European powers, especially their political system and structure.

\(^{\text{11}}\) In Hans Schwarz, Das dritte Reich (Hanseatische Verlagsanstalt, 3\(^{\text{rd}}\) ed, 1931) the author emphasises that National Socialism accepts the name ‘Third Reich’ and named the federation’s paper Oberland based on the title of Arthur Moeller van den Bruck’s work.
To him the ideal ‘power’ is Germany, his homeland, without which – according to him – no stability can or will exist in Europe.

The conservative philosopher feels antipathy for the Western democracies primarily towards France and England. He introduces the democratic system of these countries in an ironic belittling way. According to him it is only a fiction that the nation (natio) is made up of formally equal individuals. Arthur Moeller van den Bruck is convinced that Germany is predestined to lead Europe for the historical ties it has with the Holy Roman Empire (Sacrum Romanum Imperium, Heiliges Römisches Reich). He states that in its history the Holy Roman Empire was never able to amalgamate itself into a real political community (politische Gemeinschaft). The Holy Roman Empire is almost exclusively dominated by the notion of territoriality (territorialitas), the result of which is centurial territorial dismemberment. This limits the development of German ethnic identity. The birth of the ‘Second-Empire’ – despite the involvement of the political unity – failed to change this situation. The state further remains autocratic and is viewed as a ‘foreign body’ by its citizens.

Moeller van den Bruck also condemns the Weimar Germany, in which all of the political views are superficial and not reflective of society. He strongly criticises the Weimar Constitution of 1919 as well, since in his opinion it is unable to provide the united Germany with an acceptable constitutional framework. Only with the elimination of its pseudo-values can Germany fulfil its mission of reviving Europe, something it is obligated to do with its rich ties to the Holy Roman Empire. It is the duty of the young generation to revitalise the dormant German intellectuals. They have to intuitively oppose and revolt against the deceiving values.
Only as a result of such a ‘revolution’ can the ‘Third Empire’ come into existence.

The birth of the Third Empire, however, automatically assumes the territorial unification of the German ethnic group that is the termination of the system of the Peace Treaty of Versailles. The substantial growth of the German population can provide the nation with the necessary strength to attain its goal.

V

It is quite interesting from the viewpoint of the ‘Third Reich’ to briefly analyse the Weimar Constitution art 61. According to this article German-Austria after joining Germany receives proportional representation in the Imperial Council (Reichsrat). Even until the accession German-Austria (Deutsch-Österreich) is endowed with the right of consultation. Later Germany was forced to declare the passage void. According to Peace Treaty of Versailles art 80 (Versailler Friedensvertrag) Germany binds itself to acknowledging and respecting the independence of Austria. Austria’s independence is inviolable. Only with the consent of the League of Nations (Völkerbund) can the status of Austria be modified.

This condition, however, led the peace conference to the inclusion of article 88 in the text of the third draft of the State treaty (Staatsvertrag) signed with Austria (Deutsch-Österreich) on September 10, 1919 in Saint-Germain-en-Laye. According to this article Austria’s (Deutsch-Österreich) independence is inviolable and is always dependant on the consent of the League of Nations. This article of the State treaty is in unison with the decree that Austria must make a commitment to refrain from any action that could directly or indirectly threaten its independence.

It must be emphasised that this section opens the floor to a very wide range of interpretations. The expression ‘Jesuit section’ used by John Maynard Keynes is quite telling of this section. It was viewed positively by the followers of Pan-Germanism, since it left the door open for the unification with Germany (Anschluß) through a rather peculiar interpretation.

VI

The emphasis of Moeller van den Bruck’s philosophy is on the social or more specifically nationalistic demagogy. According to Arthur Moeller van den Bruck the integration of the peripheral classes into society and the German nation would be the solution to serious differences within the society of the Weimar Republic. Closely related to this idea, of course, is the goal of developing a national identity as soon as and as efficiently as possible. All this is a kind of anti-capitalist reaction and a significant contribution to the conservative and heterogeneous trend of both the conservative and the popular revolutions. The author of Das dritte Reich is an active supporter of only the first one.

Moeller van den Bruck’s idea of a ‘perfect’ empire has already been present in Lessing’s and Ibsen’s thoughts concerning the ‘Third Reich’, but was influenced primarily by Gerhard von Mutius’ value-ideal world

The decision, formulated by the Supreme Council on December 16, 1919 deals with the interpretation of the mentioned article. It was sent to chancellor Karl Renner on the same day with a lettre d’envoi, that included the Allied Powers’ guarantee for the territorial integrity of Austria.
Despite the rejection of modern liberalist ideals and the formulation of a plan for a ‘new European order’, the leaders of Germany’s political and ideological life refused to accept Arthur Moeller van den Bruck’s idea of the ‘Third Empire’ that was originally trademarked by idealistic rather than politically relevant thoughts, ideas. This general hostility was further reinforced by the publication of a strong critique of Moeller van den Bruck’s views in 1939. It is also worth mentioning that the expression ‘Prussian style’ (Preußischer Stil) comes from Arthur Moeller van den Bruck. The ideas of the conservative intellectual philosopher are especially popular with the conservative German ‘national’ intellectuals. During the Great Depression of the early 30’s Moeller van den Bruck is often cited by many adherents of this group.

Followers of the idea of conservative revolution are the writers, historians, economists and lawyers who had close ties with the Die Tat cultural journal published by Ernst Horneffer in Jena between 1909 and 1939. A majority of these people consider themselves to be the intellectual successor of Horneffer in some way. After Ernst Horneffer, Eugen Diederichs (1867–1930) takes over as the magazine’s editor. During Diederich’s editorial years the paper gains a more religious, social and cultural political appearance. From April 1913 the sub-title of Die Tat

\item Carlo Schmid writes in his memoirs, that in the 1930s the members of Tübingen Wiking-Bund, a nationalistic student group, read the works of Moeller van den Bruck. See Carlo Schmid, Erinnerungen (Scherz Verlag, 1979) 143.
\item Essays and critiques were published by distinguished writers and philosophers such as Hermann Bahr (1863–1934), Paul Ernst (1866–1933) and George Simmel (1858–1918) in Die Tat.
\end{itemize}
“Die Tat” becomes Social-religiöse Monatschrift für deutsche Kultur, reflecting well the changes in ideology of the paper. During the First World War the paper is out of print.

In 1921 the sub-title of Die Tat is changed by Diederichs to Monatschrift für die Zukunft deutscher Kultur, implying a change in style once again. The goal of the paper is changing Germany’s political and cultural life.\(^{16}\) The articles published in the Die Tat welcome the fall of the empire and follow a new socio-religious aristocratic thinking. Eugen Diederichs provides space for both the national socialists and the liberals.\(^{17}\) The ‘community of people’ (Volksgemeinschaft) wishes to bring a halt to the social and political decline of the bourgeoisie (Bürgertum) through the simultaneous creation of a national socialist and authoritarian state. Eugen Diederichs furthermore demands a ‘revolution from the top’ (Revolution von oben).

VIII

It is necessary to mention Eugen Rosenstock who further developed the ideas of Eugen Diederichs. His work on the European revolutions, published in the early 1930’s is quite influential. The same can be said about economist Ferdinand Friedrich Zimmermann alias (under pseudonym) Ferdinand Fried (1898–1967)\(^{18}\) who uses facts to demonstrate the serious crisis of capitalist production. According to him the solution to this problem is an authoritarian economic system. Rosenstock is further disturbed by the gradual impoverishment of the middle-class, and the drastic strengthening of a rather small elite in the political and cultural life of Germany.

This evermore-powerful group barely constitutes one-tenth per cent of a 60 million large Germany, yet it seems to create an unbridgeable gap between itself and the rest of society. Eugen Rosenstock believes that the only solution to this problem is not only economic expansion, but also a substantial increase in exports. In order to achieve this Germany needs to become self-sufficient economically and must switch to an authoritarian system politically.

IX

Carl Schmitt (1888–1985), a renowned professor of law and the author of the well-known work Der Hüter der Verfassung (1931) was also a person with close ties to the Die Tat. In this greatly influential work, through closely studying the Weimar Republic, he reaches the conclusion that in historic dimensions the state becomes ‘overpowering’, directly leading to the rise of a totalitarian state. In many respects Carl Schmitt’s Gegenspieler is Hermann Ignatz Heller (1891–1933) who quite appropriately writes that the need for a strong person is the bourgeoisie’s way of expressing its desperation. Through the strengthening of the working masses they feel that not only they own political and economic interests, but also the entire European culture is threatened. The only thing left for the desperate bourgeoisie is to place all their faith into a strong person.\textsuperscript{19}

Hermann Heller, who becomes a full professor of public law at Frankfurt am Main University in 1932, is a committed supporter of the Weimar Republic. The fact that in the same year he was the legal representative of the faction of the social democrats of the Prussian provincial diet in the so-called \textit{Preußenschlagverfahren} seems to only reinforce this fact. It must be pointed out that Heller thinks that the modern state and its era are entirely incompatible with the class-stratification. As he indicated in his rather fragmented work, \textit{Staatslehre} which was published after his early death, a modern state is both a social and democratic constitutional State that by definition excludes the possibility of a strong person-led authoritarian state.\textsuperscript{20}

X

Certainly worth mentioning is Hans Zehrer, who became the editor of the \textit{Die Tat} in October 1929.\textsuperscript{21} He is regarded as a supporter of the ‘conservative revolution’ and the opponent of parliamentary democracy.

\textsuperscript{19} Hermann Heller writes:
\begin{quote}
\end{quote}

\textsuperscript{20} For the importance of Heller’s view of the social state with respect to the German constitutional thinking, see Christoph Müller, \textit{Staatslehre in der Weimarer Republik: Hermann Heller zu ehren. hrsg. von Christoph Müller u. Ilse Staff} (Suhrkamp, 1985).

\textsuperscript{21} Adam Kuckhoff took over editing the \textit{Die Tat} from Diederichs in April 1928. Kuckhoff only worked at the journal for one year. In August 1943 he was executed by the Nazis as a member of the ‘Rote Kapelle’.
After World War II Zehrer becomes the editor-in-chief of the Die Welt, and modifies the sub-title (Monatsschrift zur Gestaltung neuer Wirklichkeit) established by his predecessor Adam Kuckhoff. In 1932 he adds the adjective ‘independent’ (unabhängig) to the original subtitle. The Die Tat becomes the intellectual interpretative forum for national socialist ideas although keeping a distance of from Hitler and underestimating the dangerousness of the Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiterpartei (NSDAP). As the solution to the instable political and economic system of the Weimar Republic, Hans Zehrer envisioned a new system, the ‘Third Reich’, as a fundamentally different, religion-based corporate political system.

This new system, which is in essence a 20th century version of Luther’s directorate, would be led by a new elite with ‘folk roots’. In Zehrer’s opinion only a return to the Lutheran Reformation can stop both communism and National Socialism from fulfilling their ultimate goal of establishing an authoritarian system. In accordance with Zehrer’s interpretation the ‘Third Reich’ would have an eschatological political structure that had its foundations in the Reformation.

XI

The intellectuals of the Die Tat, especially Giselher Wirsing, the person who becomes the editor of the review after the Nazi takeover in 1933, concentrate on Germany’s relations with Central Europe. Starting 1934/35 Wirsing shortens the review sub-title to Unabhängige Monatsschrift. This is ‘confirmed’ or seems to be confirmed by the unique, yet already true fact that the ‘transformation of reality’ has already taken place. From 1936 the word ‘independent’ disappears and only ‘Deutsche Monatsschrift’ appears on the cover of the paper.
In March 1939 the publication of the Die Tat comes to an end by merging with the ‘Das XX. Jahrhundert’ magazine. Despite the political and ideological changes it has gone through the years the Die Tat becomes very popular in Germany, especially during Zehrer’s editorial years. The circulation of the paper reaches a yet unprecedented 30 000 copies. In addition Tat-clubs (Tat-Kreise) are born all throughout Germany, forming intellectual debate forums.

According to Giselher Wirsing, Germany’s future is primarily influenced by South-Eastern Europe (Südost-Europa). He is convinced that the goal of Germany’s enemies or perceived enemies is to encircle the country. It is for this reason that Germany needs to establish a closed national ‘living-space’ (Lebensraum). He is convinced that self-sufficient German economy should open towards South-Eastern Europe instead of the increasingly hostile financial world. At the same time Wirsing, similarly to most of his colleagues of the Die Tat, does not wish to continue or renew the old policy of annexation.

Giselher Wirsing essentially revives the Mitteleuropa-Plan (1848–50) which states that Germany’s expansion should be directed towards Central Europe instead of the West. This latter option has been limited, anyway, by the Locarno Treaty in 1925. The ultimate goal of the expansion is to establish the so-called Großwirtschaftsraum (Greater Economic Space). The Mitteleuropa-Plan is generally associated with Friedrich Naumann (1860–1919). However, it was the Prussian-born Karl von Bruck (representative of Trieste in 1848 in the Viennese Parliament and financial minister of Austria between 1855-1859) who first developed the financial aspect of the plan.\textsuperscript{22}

XII

Moeller van den Bruck was the intellectual centre for the other group of intellectuals who sympathised with the idea of ‘conservative revolution’. These people were united under the Berlin-based Juni-Club and were led by Moeller van den Bruck’s friend Heinrich von Gleichen. There is a close relationship between the Juni-Club, organised around figures of Moeller van den Bruck, Heinrich von Gleichen and Martin Spahn from Berlin and the Deutscher Hochschulring (DHR), an organisation established and actively participating at most German universities after World War I.\textsuperscript{23} The Ring-Bewegung is primarily characterised by conservatism, a nationalistic attitude and – due to disorientation – a trend-seeking at the beginning. The ties are particularly strong in Berlin which is illustrated by the fact that the centres of the Hochschulring are in the headquarters of the Juni-Club. The Juni-Club is rather active in Berlin, in particular it exhibits educational activities of political nature. In November 1922 Martin Spahn, one of the leading figures of the Juni-Club establishes a ‘Political Collegium’, where he regularly organises lectures. From 1923 the’ Collegium’s name changes to ‘Hochschule für nationale Politik’, where he holds private ‘university’ classes. These classes are visited primarily by youth who sympathise with nationalist

\begin{itemize}
  \item It must be mentioned that Constantin Frantz, a political opponent of Otto von Bismarck, feels nostalgic towards the Holy Roman Empire. According to Frantz the three ‘Germanies’ (Prussia, Austria, and the ‘third Germany’), which include the South and Central German states, may provide the real defence against the French and Russian expansion. Frantz’s idea is anti-Nazi and was rather popular in German circles outside of Germany. See François Genton, L’Europe Centrale, une idée neuve, (1997) 362.

\end{itemize}
ideals, such as Werner Best, a lawyer and one of the most well-known national socialists having a law degree.\textsuperscript{24}

A prominent member of the \textit{Juni-Club} is Edgar Jung. The Austrian economist, philosopher and sociologist, through the influence of Othmar Spann (1878-1950), propagates the rebirth and revival of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation.\textsuperscript{25} This view is quite similar to Moeller van den Bruck’s call for the establishment of the ‘Third Reich’, since both of them reach back to the Holy Roman Empire for ideological support. Without going into an extensive analysis of the question, it must be pointed out that the linking of the Holy Roman Empire with the Germans as an ethnic group is entirely unhistorical.

\textbf{XIII}

Even based on this brief summary it can be ascertained that the idea of the ‘Third Reich’ dates back a long time. In traces it is already present in Fichte’s ideas. The idea of the ‘Third Reich’ has quite an influence on the thinking of the conservative cultural philosophers, primarily Arthur Moeller van den Bruck. It is also present in the works of the era’s influential literary, political and economic scholars. However, not even the often eschatological ‘Third Reich’ is a uniformly interpreted idea.

\textsuperscript{25} In contrast with Adam Smith and David Ricardo’s liberal economics Othmar Spann, the founder of social economics and universalism in philosophy, develops a new view for studying the so-called \textit{Ganzheitslehre}. In his opinion the construction of a ‘real state’ (\textit{wahrer Staat}) assumes the new, profession-based establishment of the economy and the state (\textit{Ständestaat auf berufsständiger Grundlage}). Through opposing the various trends of liberalism and Marxism, Spann exerts great influence on the conservative Austrian thinkers. Following the \textit{Anschluß}, Spann was stripped of his professorship in Vienna. Thereafter he took an active part in the formulation of the so-called \textit{Korneuburger Eid}, an oath of the ‘Austrofascist’ \textit{Heimwehr}.

For political and philosophical reasons the national socialist regime isolates itself from the idea of ‘Third Reich’ already by the end of the 1930s. The ‘conservative revolutionary’ branch of the Deutsche Bewegung (German Movement) – including all branches of the ‘conservative revolution’ – was unacceptable as an ideological base for the national socialist rulers. The ‘völkisch’ branch of the Deutsche Bewegung is an entirely different matter. This latter one cannot be considered a uniform movement either, since it includes the Schwarze Front trend that later came into conflict with the national socialist ideals and the Landvolkbewegung, a movement unfolding at the end of the 1920s in Schleswig-Holstein and one that wobbles between anarchy and corporatism as well. Of all these different movements, ie, ‘trends’, the Führerprinzip idea, symbolised by Hans Friedrich Karl Günter (1891–1968), the influential representative of the racist theory (Rassentheorie), Richard Walter Darré (1895–1953), Reich Minister of Food and Agriculture and Alfred Ernst Rosenberg (1893-1946), leader of the Foreign Policy Office of the NSDAP, became the official ideology of the national socialist Germany, in which the idea of the ‘Third Reich’ no longer played a role.

26 Here we point out that the trend represented by Ernst Niekisch is part of the Deutsche Bewegung’s ‘völkisch’ revolutionary branch. Ernst Niekisch is also one of Moeller van den Bruck’s students.
